Contributors

Akiko Kuwajima obtained an MA in Thai Studies at Chulalongkorn University. She worked closely with Thai returnees from Japan in northern Thailand during her MA. She has worked for the Coordinating Institution of the Asian Public Intellectuals (API) Fellowships Program, Institute of Asian Studies, Chulalongkorn University for around four years. She also received a certificate of yoga therapy in 2011 and has started her new journey on the study of mindfulness practices including yoga and their medical applications.

Junichi Akashi obtained a Ph.D in International Political Economy from the University of Tsukuba in 2005. Akashi is currently working as an Assistant Professor in the Graduate School of Humanities and Social Sciences of the University of Tsukuba. He is also author of Japan’s Immigration Control Policy: Foundation and Transition (2010, NakanishiyaShuppan, in Japanese).

Kannika Angsuthanasombat has done research on Thai migrant domestic workers in Hong Kong, female labor returnees in Thailand, and a reintegration model for returnees. She translated a handbook for Thai women migrants and worked as coordinator of Friends of Thai, a support group for Thai domestic workers in Hong Kong. Her topics of interests include international migration; labor migration; trafficking; gender and development; return and reintegration; and systemic approach on community and development. Her article here is based on research carried out under the Nippon Foundation’s Asian Public Intellectuals scheme.

Kannikar Kijiwatchakul campaigns for access to essential medicines for Médecins Sans Frontiers—Belgium (Thailand). She is also an active member of FTA Watch, Thailand, a coalition that monitors the social implications of free trade negotiations. She writes a weekly column entitled “Global Report” for Way Magazine. As host of the radio newscast called “Chao Tan Lok” (“Morning World Review”) on FM 96.5 MHz, she issues reports and commentaries on world news. For her work on radio, she has gained the reputation of being able to make difficult issues like global affairs, particularly drug patents, immediately accessible to her audience.

Pataya Ruenkaew is based in Bielefeld, Germany where she works as an independent researcher and social consultant. She is a founder of THARA Association (Thai Women Articulate Their Rights Abroad Association), an organization working to support Thai migrant women. She is particularly interested in female international migration, traffic in children and women, and Thai communities outside Thailand.

Supang Chantavanich is professor emeritus at the Faculty of Political Science, Chulalongkorn University. She graduated from University de Grenoble in France as a doctorat in sociology. Her areas of interests are international migration including overseas Chinese, refugees, labor migration, and human trafficking in Southeast Asia. She is the founder of the Asian Research Center for Migration at the Institute of Asian Studies, Chulalongkorn University and the first chairperson of the Asia Pacific Migration Research Network (APMRN).

Yuko Kato graduated from the MA program in International Development Studies at the Faculty of Political Science, Chulalongkorn University in 2007.

Yuriko Saito is an Associate Professor of International Studies, Meiji Gakuin University. She is also a committee member of JNATIP (Japan Network Against Trafficking in Persons), which was organized in late 2003 by NGOs, shelters, and lawyers to press the government to establish a comprehensive law against trafficking in persons. She has been working closely with the ex-victims of human trafficking for social reintegration and pursuing eradication of human trafficking.